ISSUES HOT OFF THE PRESS

In the psychobabble of the 1990s, the 49ers have "issues." They came out looking like some horrendous monster in the 23-7 drubbing by the Panthers last Sunday.

The first issue is the plight of quarterback

Steve Young. He hobbled out of the locker room after the game looking like Festus in the old "Gunsmoke" television series. He was dragging his right leg as if it were wooden.

Undoubtedly, Young was not the same player against the Panthers. Despite two weeks of rest, Young's aching groin and abdominal strain have the potential to become a season-long concern.

Young looked as nifty as a statue. He ran just once and was sacked four times. Some of those he probably could have avoided had he been healthy.

Young downplayed his physical problems.

"No," Young said when asked if his lack of mobility hurt him.

"When I wanted to move, I could move. It just didn't come up that much today."

Young's words could barely be heard because of his stiff upper lip. He had a passable game (24-for-40 passing, 267 yards, a touchdown and an interception), but in order for him to be effective he must have his runable game, too. In fact, the 49ers' offense is built on it.

When mad professor Bill Walsh was hatching the 49ers' scheme down his basement, he came up with the "X factor." The "X factor" is the ability of his quarterbacks to move and avoid the rush while receivers downfield complete their routes. It's an essential component of the offense.

Last weekend, Young wasn't truly up to the X factor part of the game, particularly after getting crunched by linebacker Kevin Greene on his very first snap.

So now the club must discern just how serious Young's injury is, and what they should do about it. This is where Young's toughness and competitiveness becomes a liability.

Young is like that dismembered knight in the film "Monty Python and the Holy Grail," who keeps getting limbs hacked off but maintains he can fight, professing his amputations as just "flesh wounds."

Young wants to play under any circumstances. In fact, he pitched his helmet upon hearing he wouldn't be going back into the game after the Panthers took a 23-7 lead in the final seconds.

Young isn't to blame. Competitive spirit isn't something that can be tamed. Young will always want to play, and now more than ever.

The six-foot, five-inch shadow Elvis Grbac is lurking right behind him. As has already been said, Grbac's in the last year of his contract and next year will seek a starter's multi-millions. The health of Young will determine whether Grbac will make the money with the body for a group hug? 49ers or someone else.

Also, Young wants to make up for all those years he gnawed on a meal made of his own lower lip while sitting behind Joe Montana. Despite those factors, its up to the 49ers to determine if he can be effective. The team will meditate on that very subject this week, and don't be surprised if Young is either set down or limited in upcoming games until his groin injury fully heals.

Another issue is the 49ers' reaction to being behind. It isn't a situation they're in often, but the comeback victory is essential to a championship season, according to wide receiver Jerry Rice.

"You're not always going to be able to come out and jump on your opponent," Rice said. "You have to able to come back and be able to win that game.'

The 49ers had six games decided by six points or fewer last year, and they lost five of them. The lone victory was against the Saints (24-22 in the opener) when the Niners allowed two scores at the end of the game to make it close.

The last time the 49ers fought from behind to win a game was against the Rams in Los Angeles in 1994. Certainly, there will opportunities in the next 13 games for the 49ers to make a valiant effort to score at the end of a game and win.

So, those are the 49ers' "issues." Both are thorny problems that will bear watching throughout the sea-

And now that they have been fully discussed, any-

DON'T WRITE HIM OFF YET

Q. IS Y O U R TOP PICK (ISRAEL IFEANYI) G O I N G TO MAKE A CON-TRIBU-TION THIS

A. I think

so. Whether or not it's this season remains to be seen. But I think he's going to be an NFL football player and do a good job for us. Some players will come in like Bryant Young and William Floyd and dominate right off the bat. Then, there have been others where it's taken them two or three years to really get into the flow of things.

Q. HOW LONG ARE YOU GOING TO WAIT?

A. I don't think I'm going to wait beyond next season. It's optimistic for a coach to say next season.

Q. ARE YOU SURPRISED HE HASN'T DEVELOPED FASTER?

A. Not necessarily, no. I'm not to the point of panic or, 'Oh, My God.' Am I surprised? I cap't say I'm really surprised. There has been some dramatic improvement.

We're going to play the Falcons and we're going to need a pass rush. It's the time and the type of game in which he could come to the front a little bit more.

Q. WITH NATE SINGLETON NOW OUT, DO YOU FEEL COMFORTABLE WITH ROOKIE TERRELL OWENS AS THE NO. 3 WIDE RECEIVER?

A. Owens just hasn't had the opportunity to really demonstrate what he can do with the ball in his hands and hasn't been the focal point of any passes. He's going through the learning process. But he's really intent and wants to do well as much as anybody. I'm kind of excited to see him wind up in this situation where he can start getting some passes.

Q. DO YOU HAVE MORE CONFI-DENCE IN THE OFFENSIVE LINE?

A. Because of the way they played in the Rams game, yes. But now, though, we're into another (game). So (what they have done so far) doesn't mean a damned thing. We have to do it again.

have to do it again.

Q. HAVE YOU HAD ANY REQUESTS FROM STEVE YOUNG OR JERRY RICE TO OPEN UP THE OFFENSE?

A. No, as a matter of fact, I haven't. Neither one has come to me specifically, which in the past they have if there were things on their minds. But I think everybody's pretty much into what we're trying to do and what we're trying to build. I think they understand the passing game and scoring touchdowns will come.

Q. IS PLAYING DIVISION OPPO-NENTS TOUGHER BECAUSE YOU PLAY THEM TWICE A YEAR?

A. Yes. Everybody knows one another so well. You develop a sense of the other team. If we play the Saints, certain plays jump into your mind. As a coach you feel that way and as a player you get to know the player you've played in front of. Say you've played in the league for eight years. The other guy from the other teams knows your counters, and the day you were on, and vice versa. It is tough.

Q. IS GARY PLUMMER BACK AT FULL STRENGTH?

A. Yes. He's practicing with the first group. I think the other things that has happened that's a positive in this whole thing is Kevin Mitchell went in and did such a good job. We know we're backed up there with a quality guy. Just like Elvis (Grbac) last year, you kind of find out when you are forced into these situations. It's another good example of a guy staying prepared and taking advantage of his opportunity. I know you want to print that, and tell your fans, if they stay prepared there are going to be opportunities.

Q. DO YOU HAVE TO ADJUST YOUR PREPARATION DRASTI-CALLY IF THE

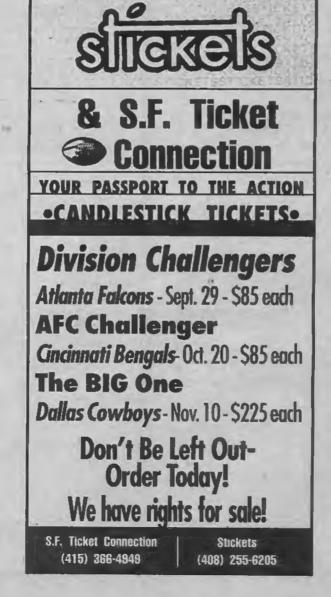

THE OPPONENT'S STARTING QUARTERBACK CAN'T PLAY?

A. Not really. My position is it doesn't matter who plays, you have to be at your best. Because if you're not at your best, and not playing skillfully and energetically, a backup can beat you every bit as much as a starter, especially when you are dealing with a veteran backup. You have to be at your best. It doesn't make any difference.

bes.,It doesn't make any difference.
Q. COULD THE PANTHERS BECOME A BITTER DIVISION RIVAL?

A. I don't know. Who knows? We have a ways to go before we worry about that. It's interesting because some people were really complaining about getting an expansion team in our division. I think we found out in a hurry that expansion teams can be tough if you're not playing well.

9ER NUGGETS

NEW STADIUM PLAN FULL OF 'PEP'

In a desire to distance himself from the Raiders, 49ers president Carmen Policy said the team planned to institute a "Planned Equity Position" to sell tickets at the 49ers' proposed new stadium.

While he didn't mention numbers the PEP would be a fee for tickets similar to the Raiders' personal seat license (PSL). The PEP would differ in that the one-time fee would entitle the ticket holder to lifetime seat-buying rights,

The Raiders' PSL plan must be renewed every 10 years. Also, Policy said PEPs would probably be sold by a third party, and traded in an organized market.

"(It will) enable the fan to make an investment based on popularity and strength of the team," Policy said.

So the fee for tickets would be lower than the market demand for 49ers season tickets. Policy sees this as a good deal for the potential buyer.

"I feel confident they (PEP buyers) will be able to get their money back at any time (by selling ticket rights) and get their money back with possibly a premium."

This also differs from the Raiders' plan. Current PSL holders couldn't get the money they paid for their rights if they were sold now.

Of course, the 49ers' ticket rights could go down if the team goes through a prolonged losing streak, as the Raiders just experienced. Policy doesn't anticipate that happening.

When asked what the difference between the Raiders' and the 49ers' ticket rights plans were, Policy said, "Fifteen years of performance, a readymade market, a ready-made demand." He also said, "PSLs to me reflect a concept that has suffered severe contamination. I don't want to create the idea that anything we're doing is directly or indirectly related to what they're doing across the bay."

The Raiders can't get either their PSLs and game tickets sold, which might leave the city of Oakland on the hook for $49 million in stadium renovation costs.

The money for the 49ers' PEPs would help finance the construction of a $250 million stadium. The stadium proposal will probably come out in January, and is to be put to a vote of San Franciscans in June.

Policy said that every single dime raised from the PEPs will go into the new stadium.

SAM MANUEL RELEASED

After a lifetime of playing football together, twins Sam and Sean Manuel were finally separated.

The Manuels were drafted in the seventh round by the 49ers last April. Tight end Sean immediately impressed the club. In fact, he was so good the 49ers released Brett Carolan to make room for him.

Linebacker Sam was then released during the final cuts and re-signed to the practice squad. The 49ers released Sam last week to make room for wide receiver Brice Hunter.

"It was a rough thing," Coach George Seifert said, "We didn't-want to do it by any means: But we have a full complement of linebackers We were one short practicing as far as the wide receivers," Seifert said Manuel might be called back to the practice squad later in the year.

Sixth-round draft choice Stephen Pitts was called to the practice last week. The 49ers released former University of California running back Reynard Rutherford to make room for him.

HANKS SIGNS NEW DEAL

afety Merton Hanks signed a seven-year, $22 million contract. Terms of the deal were announced in a joint press conference with Hanks, club president Carmen Policy and Leigh Steinberg, Hank's agent.

"(Hanks) is everything we look for in a 49ers player," Policy said. The Niners made him a significantly richer man. They wiped out the final year of his contract, which was due to pay him about $700,000 a year.

Along with a $4.75 million signing Hanks has been act bonus, Hanks will get $1.1 million this his six-year career.

season. The average pay over the life of the deal is $3.4 million, making him the highest-paid safety in the game.

Unlike cornerback Eric Davis, the club signed Hanks before he hit the free agent market after the season. Davis went unsigned after 1995 and eventually jumped to the Panthers for a four-year $11.4 million deal.

Hanks said he's going to start the Hanks Foundation, which will be in conjunction with the 49ers Foundation to provide assistance to Bay Area charities. Hanks has been active in charities over his six-year career.

FLOYD VS. BRADSHAW

Fullback William Floyd has found motivation in the strangest places. Try former Steelers quarterback and current television commentator Terry Bradshaw.

"I'm being motivated by (him)," Floyd said.

Fellow analyst and former 49ers safety Ronnie Lott said the Niners would get a boost when Floyd, who's recovering from a dislocated knee, came off the Physically Unable to Perform list in October. Bradshaw apparently didn't agree.

"Terry made the remark that I'm going to need confidence in myself before I can give to the rest of the team," Floyd said. "I can't wait to be able to say, 'Hey, look old Super Bowl-winning dude, the reason you won the Super Bowl was because you had Lynn Swann and (John) Stallworth and Franco Harris and a lot of great players around you. And you were throwing off your back foot most of your career."

The motivation seems to be working. Strength and conditioning coach Jerry Attaway said the Floyd could play right now. The only problem Floyd currently has with the surgically repaired right knee is occasional swelling.

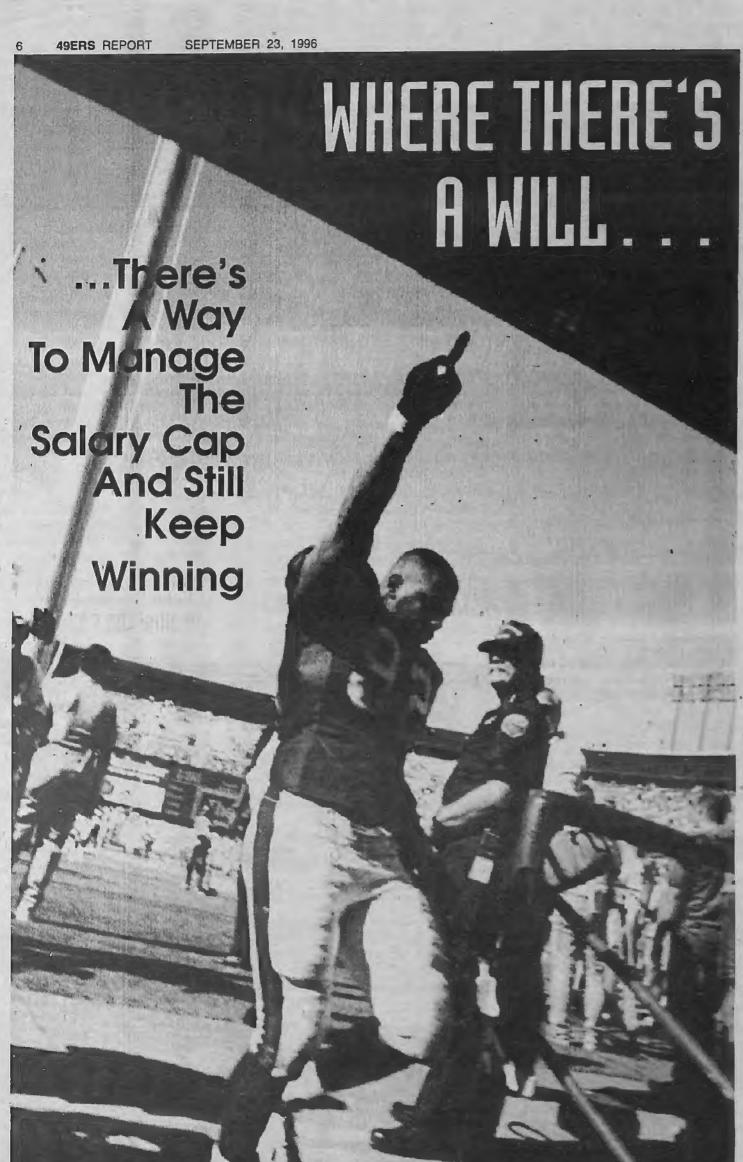

Rules of the PUP dictate that Floyd can't practice until next month, and won't be able to come back to the team until after Week 6.

"When I step out on that field, I'm going to ready to go," Floyd said, "I'm hungry."

A TRIUMPHANT ROY BARKER

ans must wonder what kind of financial shell game the 49ers are running over there at 4949 Centennial Blvd.

They read how the team is constantly squeezed up against the salary cap. The next thing they read is how they just signed Jerry Rice to a seven-year, $32 million contract extension, or safety Merton Hanks to a seven-year $22.4 million deal?

How is this possible? It's all part of sports business in the 1990s and the 49ers do it as well or better than anyone else. It's a major reason they've been able to stay competitive despite imposition of the salary cap in 1992.

To fully understand how the Niners have dealt with the cap, we must first delve into their recent financial history.

THE PAST

ellow'owners used to yelp about Eddie DeBartolo spare-no-ex pense approach back in the 1980s. They said he was ruiring the league's salary structure and pushing payroll to obscene heights.

Indeed, with no real free agency in NFL football and no salary cap, the 49ers spent freely. Recently, club president Carmen Policy harkened back to 1989, when the 49ers were signing players seemingly every day.

"We had a phenomenal team that went to the Super Bowl," he said, "and we were signing players through spring, summer and training camp."

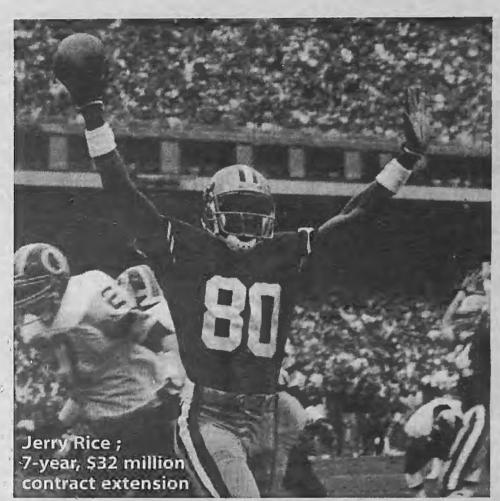

Some of the players were given sizable salaries and hardly played a down. Former Browns cornerback Hanford Dixon and ex-Bills nose tackle Fred Smerlas were perfect examples. Owner Eddie DeBartolo spent wildly. He also plunged the team into debt.

But the privately owned DeBartolo Corp. was so successful with its real estate ventures, money spent on the football team was no big thing. The 1980s was one prolonged party for the DeBartolo Corp. and the Niners. The club won four Super Bowls and was called "Team of the Decade." Plus, the corporation was striking deals and breaking ground on mall construction throughout the United States.

But if the '80s was a party, the '90s was the hangover. The real estate market bottomed out, creditors came after the corporation and the league introduced the salary cap. With bankers soaking up the corporation's liquid assets the 49ers could no longer spend lavishly.

That's when DeBartolo sent for Policy, his close confidant, to be the president of the team.

"Part of my job was to make sure the 49ers became self-sufficient so that would enable the family, no matter what the circumstances, to maintain ownership well into the 21st century," Policy said recently.

Shortly after Policy moved from Youngstown, Ohio, and became a Bay Area resident, the league imposed the salary cap, which was to take effect in 1993. Under the cap's rules, the 49ers were actually forced to cut their payroll.

"The first thing we did in '92 was recognize we were in big trouble come '93 when the cap hit, unless we got immediate relief," Policy said. "We knew the team would fall apart unless we restructured in '92."

In the last 6-8 weeks of that season the club reworked contracts of 10 players, most of them starters. Steve Young, John Taylor, Merton Hanks, Brent Jones and Eric Davis were some of the players who had their contracts redone so they wouldn't count against the cap.

Without making the move the 49ers probably would have lost several of those players the next year. The Redskins were also far above the salary cap at that time, yet they didn't restructure with same vigor as the 49ers.

In that year the 'Skins were 9-7 and lost to the 49ers in a divisional playoff game. The next year, they lost several of their most talented players and fell to 4-12. They haven't had a winning record since.

By contrast, the 49ers have maintained double-digit victory seasons and won a Super Bowl in 1994.

he 49ers have redone dozens of contracts, and doled out millions in contract bonuses since the cap was imposed. Because of it, they will be able to keep the roster stocked with talent. The chief device employed to make room is contract re-structuring. It's a technique generally credited to superagent Leigh Steinberg.

"I stuffed a bunch of lawyers in a room, and didn't feed them until they found out a way to work around the cap," is how Steinberg put it.

What they came up with was the prorated bonus. Say a player has a straight salary of $3.5 million for one year. His salary cap figure is then $3.5 million.

In re-structuring, the player instead gets a $2 million signing bonus, and his salary is reduced to $1.5 million. Years are then added to the contract (in this case, let's say three), and the $2 million bonus is spread over the four years at $500,000 a year. So even though the player is going to make the same amount ($2 million in bonus and $1.5 million in salary) his cap number is reduced to $2 million because the bonus is spread over four years.

And even though the bonus is spread out, the player collects it in the year of the re-structure.

"It's a winning situation for the player because he gets money up front," said linebacker and Steinberg client Gary Plummer. "It's a winning situation for the club because they get the player for more years."

Usually, the team has to also attach salary along with the prorated bonus for an extension. Nevertheless, it accomplishes the goal of creating room to sign other players.

Players have to be happy where-they are playing in order to agree to a contract extension.

"If a guy is on a team he doesn't want to be a part of," said another Steinberg client, safety Tim McDonald, "he doesn't want it begause he doesn't want those extra years."

Most 49ers agree to the terms because they like being with the club, which often isn't the case elsewhere. But there are other detractors, particularly from management's side. Whether restructuring a contract, or signing a player to a long-term deal with a big bonus up front, the 49ers are taking a gamble.

Use defensive end Chris Doleman as an example. He signed a five-year $12.5 million contract with a $3.4 million signing bonus spread out through the life of the deal. Doleman will be 35 next month. If he gets hurt, or becomes ineffective, the Niners will be sacrificing cap room in 1997-99 for a player they no longer have.

"You don't want a signing bonus that's going to get a guy here for only one year," Policy said. "We're looking for Chris Doleman for three years."

The 49ers are willing to push some of their cap debt into the future, because their belief is television revenues and money from new stadiums will raise the level of future caps. But, a team could get stuck by stretching several bonuses out too long, thus gobbling up future cap space.

Steve Young, John Taylor, Merton Hanks, Brent Jones and Eric Davis were some of the players who had their contracts redone so they wouldn't count against the cap.

The 49ers have re-structured the contracts of Harris Barton, Kirk Scrafford, Jesse Sapolu, Brent Jones, Steve Young (several times) Lee Woodall and Plummer, just to name a few.

'That's a danger for every club, not just the 49ers," said agent Jim Steiner, who represents Rice, Elvis Grbac and Chris Dalman. "It could hurt them. But I'm sure they've figured what percentage of contracts they can prorate into the future."

In order to create cap room the 49ers have also asked players for an outright reduction of their contracts. Steinberg said players on the 49ers are more willing to do it than players on other teams.

"Here's part of what happens," Steinberg said. "(The club) builds a paradigm where players will re-negotiate their contracts for each other. That doesn't happen with other teams where you don't have a lot of trust in management."

For example, McDonald accepted a reduction in his contract so the 49ers could create room to sign Deion Sanders in 1994.

"Guys pitched in money for Deion and for some others," Hanks said.

"That helped us win a Super Bowl. 1 think players understood that. I'm sure there is going to be a time when I need to do something to help get a player and help with the bottom line. I think every player has that sense."

With such long contracts, Steiner said the players also realize they might have to accept a contract reduction towards the ends of their contracts.

"That's part of the deal," he said.

Also, while no agent wants his player to be underpaid down the line because he's stuck in a long-term deal, they are more willing to lock in the 49ers.

"They play a lot looser with the contract term," Steinberg said.

That means the 49ers are sometimes willing to renegotiate higher if the player is underpaid.

For example, Jerry Rice had his contract redone this summer despite having too years left.

"That's pretty unheard of," Steiner

Another reason the team has built trust with players and agents is they aren't chintzy.

"They don't take pride in the 'Bargain," Steinberg said, "signing a player for $2 million when he's really worth $2.5. If they have the money, they will pay what he's worth."

But, Steiner says that doesn't mean Policy isn't a good negotiator.

"There have been times when I've been ready to explode, but Carmen will charm me," he said. "If you didn't know him, Carmen is the kind of guy who even know it was gone."

Also, if an agent goes into negotiations without leverage, watch out.

"He'll walk all over you," Steiner said.

THE FUTURE

n terms of keeping the club com petitive despite cutting the payroll because of the salary cap, Policy has done an incredible job.

Policy now has an even harder task before him, and that's selling San Francisco voters on the idea of a new stadium. Believe it or not, it is intimately connected with the cap.

Policy used the example of the Rams, who moved to St. Louis and are now playing in a new downtown stadium. Policy said the Rams might reap between $25 and $30 million a year with money generated from personal seat licenses and ticket sales.

About 60 percent of that money goes to the rest of the teams and raises the salary cap. Say $15 million goes toward the cap. It means each team gets to raise its cap by $500,000.

But the rest goes to the Rams, which they can now spend on salaries. Policy argues the teams with new facilities will could take your wallet and you wouldn't have financial edge to stretch themselves further than teams without the new revenues. Policy said the 49ers have been first, second or third in revenue production the last 10 years, but he predicts this year the team will drop to seventh. And once new teams are in Nashville and Cleveland, he sees the 49ers dropping to the middle of the pack.

And because the 49ers must now turn a profit (not like the '80s), he sees them losing their ability to sign and keep top talent.

"The new revenue streams become mandatory, or you literally won't be able to compete," Policy said.

So, now the 49ers are thrust into the position of convincing voters a new stadium is in their best interests. Policy uses a very persuasive argument, but so did the San Francisco Giants with their appeals to dig into the public till to pay for their new ballpark.

If Policy can cut the 49ers payroll and still keep them competitive, as he did in 1993, maybe he can find a way to put a new stadium together. Undoubtedly, he needs to pull another rabbit out of the hat, or in this case, the cap.

BILL RING

In many ways, hard-working Bill Ring exemplified the 49ers' first world championship season, in 1981. Not particularly strong or fast, Ring made the team as a free agent fullback and stayed six seasons. His specialty was special teams and role playing.

YESTERDAY:

Played for the 49ers from 1981-86 Appeared in 69 games with nine starts ... Finished career with 733 yards on 183 carries (4.0 yards per carry), and eight touchdowns ... Scored a TD in a playoff game against the Giants in 1981 ... Tried out for the Steelers as a free agent in 1980, but released ... Native of Belmont, Calif., and a graduate of Carlmont High School ... Attended San Mateo Junior College and Brigham Young.

TODAY:

Knowing that any of his six seasons with the Niners might well be his last, Ring began an investment banking career in the offseason of 1983. After retiring in 1987, he was hired full-time by the Wells Fargo Co. He took a leave of absence one year to be a coach with Bill Walsh, but afterward went right back to his chosen field.

"I loved coaching," said Ring by telephone from his downtown San Francisco office, "but this (banking) is my life's work." Ring is now a sales and marketing director for Roberts, Stephens & Co.

ROOKIE YEAR:

Ring has fond memories when he considers the 1981 season, the first for him and the first championship year for the 49ers. "I think if you talk to most players, even the

"I think if you talk to most players, even the guys who have four Super Bowl rings, they'll say the first one was the best," Ring said. "We just came out of nowhere."

And so did Ring. Injured in training camp, Ring was released after Game 3.

"They told me they were looking for a roster spot for me," Ring said. "But I didn't know if it was going to work out."

Two weeks later, Ring got a call. The 49ers wanted him back before playing the heavily favored Cowboys at Candlestick Park

"I just decided to go all out, because I didn't know if I was going to be around a week later," Ring said.

The strategy worked. Ring made six tackles on special teams and the Niners pounced on the NFL scene by dismantling the Cowboys, 45-14.

"I knew I had to make a ripple in the pond," he said.

He kept that attitude through six seasons with the team.

THE BIG ONE:

Ring's most cherished memory was the Super Bowl XVI, a game the 49ers won 26-21 over the Bengals in Pontiac, Mich. "There was so much electricity in the air," he said. "It was amazing."

One thing he'll never forget is Ronnie Lott and his attempt to block a kick.

"We were rushing up the middle and he said we had to block the kick. I'll never forget the intensity on his face."

Another thing he'll never forget is the coach, Bill Walsh, acting as a bellhop as the team got off the bus after landing in Detroit. Walsh went up to Ring and asked him if he needed help with a light bag, Ring said "no", and grew irritated when Walsh persisted. Then he realized it was his head coach.

"The bellhop thing was pretty special," Ring said.

BOTH SIDES NOW:

So was coaching. Ring took Walsh's offer to become one of his assistants in the first year of Walsh's second stint at Stanford in the early 1990s. One thing he learned from Walsh was organization.

"It was better than Stanford Business School in preparing me for what I'm doing now," Ring said.

Three months before spring practice that first year, Walsh went to each of his assistants and told them to break practices down to 10-minute segments. He then wanted to know what that particular coach was going to teach his players in each of those 10 minute slots.

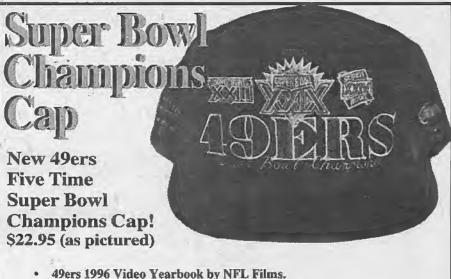

"I've tried to apply that in my organization now," Ring said, "but I'm not quite at that level."

OLD TEAM TIES:

Ring stays fairly close to the 49ers and watches the games, he says, "just like anyone else."

But he does have more an attachment than the average fan.

"It was always a dream come true," Ring said of his six years on the 49ers.

By Kevin Lynch

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The 49ers discovered they're like the little girl with the curl in the middle of her forehead. When they're good, they are very, very good.

And when they're bad they get waxed by a second-year team, 23-7.

And that's exactly what happened last Sunday against the Panthers. The loss knocked the Niners from first place in the NFC West, a spot where they had resided for 43 of the last 46 regular-season weeks. Now the 2-1 Niners are looking up at the 3-0 Panthers.

The Panthers grabbed the game and the 49ers by the throat right from the start. They marched downfield and scored when former 49ers tight end Wesley Walls caught a 19-yard touchdown pass from veteran Steve Beuerlein. It was the first time a Niners defense had yielded a touchdown on an opening drive in 28 games.

"Maybe when we saw our defense getting handled, it trickled down to the rest of the team," Coach George Seifert said, groping to try to explain his team's poor showing.

Indeed, coming into the contest, the 49ers were ranked first in the league in defense, and were coming off a 34-0 shutout of the Rams. They were also facing one of the league's worst offenses. The starting quarterback didn't even put on a uniform.

But in the first half the Panthers looked like the Chargers' offense of days of Dan Fouts. They nearly quadrupled the Niners for passing yardage (202-54), and shot out to a 17-0 lead. And they could have had more, but cornerback Marquez Pope intercepted Beuerlein's pass in the end zone.

"(The Panthers were) precise and exacting in picking apart our defense," Seifert said.

They surprised the 49ers slightly by coming out in a three-wide receiver, one-back offense. They proceeded to riddle the defense with short passes.

"They didn't do anything complicated," Pope said.
What they did was out-execute the 49ers. In the Panthers' first drives Beuerlein was 14-of-15 passing for 185 yards and two touchdowns, both to Walls.

Asked if he had ever seen Beuerlein play so well, veteran linebacker Gary Plummer said, "Once, when he was with the Raiders. And the result was the same."

Plummer played nine years for the Chargers before coming to the 49ers in 1994.

The Panthers used short passes to their big wide receivers, who often broke tackles to get downfield. They also depended upon the hard running of rookie Tim Biakabutuka to provide ground support.

Brakabutuka was consistently stopped, but would somehow wriggle away for more yardage. At one point, Brakabutuka disappeared in the pile, popped out the other end and squirted for a 7-yard gain.

"I think some poor tackling hurt us," defensive

Young, along with Dana Stubblefield, were supposed to have a huge edge over guards Greg Skrepanak and Frank Garcia and center Curtis Whitley. Television commentator and former Niners linebacker Matt Millen called the performance of those three "pathetic" against the Saints, the Panthers' foe in Week 2.

Against the 49ers, however, it was a different story. "They beat us to the punch," said Young. "You have to give them (the Panthers' interior line) cradit for what they did today."

The 49ers greatly helped the Panthers with untimely penalties. On the 49ers' first offensive play, Jerry Rice made a fingertip catch for an apparent 34-yard gain. But the play was called back because Harris Barton was charged with holding charged with holding.

Later, during the Panthers' first drive, the 49ers had them stopped when Walls dropped a pass on third-and-four that would have given the Panthers a first down at the 49ers' 24. But half of the 49ers' defensive line was guilty of encroachment.

Without those two penalties the 49ers might have been up 7-3, instead of down 14-0.

Ahead 17-0, the Panthers opened the second half in a nuckel defense, and the 49ers tried to run them out of it.

"When you start to run the ball, that's exactly what they want you to do," wide receiver Jerry Rice said. "Then they eat up some clock."

It was actually a 44-yard pass that made the game somewhat close. Derek Loville sped right past cornerback Tyrone Poole on a clearing route. When the primary receiver didn't break open, Young scrambled and spied Loville alone in the end zone. It was Young's first touchdown pass in more than 20 quarters

"Their defense speaks for itself," Seifert said. "We had only one touchdown, and that was on a sandlot play."

Still, the 49ers had a glimmer of hope. They were down by only 10 points with most of the second half to play. The hope vanished when John Kasay kicked a 35-yard field goal on the ensuing drive.

A blown coverage was the key. The 49ers blitzed on third-and-10, which left Walls open down the middle. His 34-yard reception was the centerpiece of the seven-play march.

Down 20-7, the 49ers still looked like they might pull out a victory. Their offense finally emerged from its first-half hibernation and worked its way slowly down the field again.

The Niners got to the Panthers' 22, facing a fourth-and-seven. That's when the Panthers made the call of the day. Panthers' coaches undoubtedly noticed 49ers kicker Jeff Wilkins hobbled off the field following the second-half kick-off. So the Panthers called a time out with three seconds remaining in the quarter. It forced the 49ers to run one more play at the west end of the Stadium. That's where a stirring wind had kicked up. If the 49ers had been able to change to the other end of the field, the wind could have helped Wilkins' field goal attempt get through the uprights.

Wilkins' field goal attempt get through the uprights.

With the wind against the 49ers, Seifert decided to go for the first down instead of the field goal.

"I felt as though we had to ignite something," Seifert said, "Our field position had been horrendous all day."

But Young misfired on a pass attempt to J.J. Stokes, and the 49ers were turned away on a 14-play, 6:19 drive.

Still, the 49ers still had a chance in the late going. Young had the offense moving crisply down the field with five and half minutes to play. But on first-and-goal from the '9, the 49ers committed their first turnover of the season.

Young was aiming a pass for wide receiver Terrell Owens, but it was intercepted by safety Brett Maxie. Young expected Owens to flash in front of Maxie. He floated behind him instead.

"We just need to spend more time together," Young said.

The pickoff killed off any chance the Nmers had of salvaging victory.

While most players and coaches vowed they didn't take the Panthers too lightly, offensive tackle Steve Wallace had a different view.

"What happens is you sit around are read what your capable of and how good you are for two weeks," Wallace said. "And you take hard work for granted. We have a lot of new faces, and some people might believe we can win games just based on talent. That's not true. We win games based on effort."

Apparently, that effort was lacking last week against the Panthers. As Plummer put it, "That is no expansion team,"

WORTH NOTING

STADIUM ENTOURAGE:

The 49ers played in a stadium they dearly want to see built in San Francisco. Several consultants, including political trouble-shooter Jack Davis, accompanied the Niners to Charlotte and toured Ericsson Stadium the day before the game. Davis shepherded the passage of the San Francisco Giants' ballpark proposal last March. The 49ers want their own stadium proposal in place by January and hope to have it on the June ballot.

FIRST HALF SCORING:

The 49ers came into the game outscoring opponents 36-0 and outgaining them 412-95 in first halves. Prior to Sunday's game the 49ers have given an average of 3.5 points in first halves in their last 18 games. They yielded and average 1.9 points in first quarters over the same stretch.

STREAK BROKEN

The 49ers hadn't allowed an opponent to score a touchdown on its opening possession in the last 28 games, the longest streak in the NFL It was broken on Sunday.

ODDS & ENDS:

The Panthers and the Jaguars are the only teams against which WR Jerry Rice hasn't scored a touchdown. The 49ers haven't played the Jaguars in regular-season action... The 49ers have been in first place in the NFC West 42 of the last 45 weeks ... This was the first time the 49ers ever played in North Carolina. The two teams played at Clemson Stadium in South Carolina last year ... The 49ers have a 59-21-1 road record since 1986, the best in the NFL ... Rice has caught at least one pass in 162 games straight. Brent Jones has caught at least one pass in 63 straight games.

Game Preview

Factors 49ers

It's time for the Falcons, and 49ers fans should remember them.

This is the team that exposed the 49ers' fatal flaws in the regular-season finale last year. For those who don't remember, those flaws included defensive inconsistency, lack of running game and an overemphasis on Jerry Rice.

Those same problems doomed the Niners in the divisional round of the playoffs, when they were jarred from post-season play by the Packers.

The Niners, of course, took steps in the off-season to remedy those problems. Part of the solution was to lure free agent defensive end Chris Doleman from the Falcons with several million dollars.

Doleman complied and now the Falcons are minus a pass rusher in a defense sorely lacking talent. The good news is the 49ers now have a proven pass rusher.

Doleman has been one reason for the 49ers' defensive dominance this season. The Falcons, meanwhile, continue to have the same strengths and weaknesses they always seem to have. On offense they have more weapons than a nuclear arsenal. On defense they'd have trouble stopping the local cub scout troop from scoring.

Chris Doleman

have the ball...

The 49ers are probably going to have a ball on offense. They usually do against the porous Falcons defense. The Falcons have been horrid defending the pass over the last few years. In the two games last year Steve Young had 647 yards passing and he averaged 42 passes a contest against the Falcons last year. Wide receiver Jerry Rice had an even better time of it with 23 catches for a whopping 320 yards the two times the clubs played each other. The Falcons have recently played a nickel defense against the 49ers, forcing them to run.

YOUNG VS. FALCONS:

Young has thrown more TD passes against the Falcons in his career than other team (27) He also has more interceptions (12). The Vikings are second on Young's interception list with nine.

When the

have the ball..

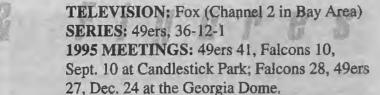

The last vestige of the run-and-shoot offense resides in Atlanta. Quarterback Jeff George seems comfortable with the scheme and he has talented targets in Terence Mathis, Eric Metcalf and others. The 49ers have traditionally tried to thwart that offense with six defensive backs and one linebacker, and they have had good success with it. But the 49ers don't have as much depth in the secondary as they would like. In fact, if one cornerbacks is injured they'll be forced to use Frankie Smith, a player who joined the team just a few weeks ago.

RICE VS. FALCONS:

Rice has been a touchdown machine against the Falcons, the league's all-time touchdown leader has 21 against them. The next closest is the Rams on whom he has scored 17. Rice had an NFL-record five TDs against the Falcons on Oct. 14 1990.

Game Four

DATE: Sunday, Sept. 29 SITE: Candlestick Park KICKOFF: 1 p.m. (PST) SURFACE: Grass

Worth Noting

THE LAST TIMES: The 49ers played the Falcons at Candlestick Park early last season, and defeated them 41-10. In that game, QB Steve Young was blasted by Falcons LB Jesse Tuggle while he was trying to run out of bounds. The shot injured Young's shoulder, and the injury would later worsen and cause him to miss five games. The Falcons' 28-27 victory in the season finale secured them the final NFC playoff spot and kept the 49ers from securing homefield advantage for the playoffs.

BY GEORGE: QB Jeff George has been excellent against the rest of the league, but downright awful against the Niners. In four tries, he has never thrown for more than 200 yard against the Niners. He also thrown five interceptions and three touchdowns in those games.

HEBERT TO THE RESCUE: In the last contest, former Niners DE Tim Harris knocked George out of the game in the second quarter with a hard hit. Former Saints QB Bobby Hebert then came on and won the game for the Falcons. Most 49ers defenders said they would rather face George than Hebert, who has more experience.

SAME OLD TIM: Former 49ers CB Tim McKyer is in his second stint with the Falcons. It's his fifth different team since leaving the 49ers in 1989. McKyer burned bridges with the Panthers, his last team, when they asked him to be a backup. "Don't be asking me to be a backup to a bunch of backup-caliber players," McKyer said. He is listed as third-string on the Falcons' depth chart.

THE SERIES: The 49ers are 11-5 against the Falcons since 1988 ... The Falcons haven't beaten the 49ers in San Francisco since 1991 ... The Falcons have beaten the 49ers twice with crazy plays at the end of games — once on a Hail Mary pass in Atlanta in '91 and again on a controversial Billy "White Shoes" Johnson TD reception on the last play of a game in '83 ... The Falcons were the last NFC West team to sweep a season series from the 49ers. That was 1991. In the next season, the 49ers won both games a combined score of 97-20.

Key Players

49ers

The Falcons will, no doubt, want to test the improved Niners' running game, making RB Derek Loville and FB Tommy Vardell keys to victory ... A good running game could open things even more for WR Jerry Rice, who has made a habit of devasting the Falcons ... LB Ken Norton is vital to stopping the Falcons' running attack ... CB Steve Israel will be under pressure as the fifth defensive back against the Falcons' run-and-shoot offense.

Darnell Walker

Falcons

Pressure will once again fall on Falcons CBs Anthony Phillips and Darnell Walker as they try to keep up with Jerry Rice and J.J. Stokes ... One of the Falcons best offensive players is former Stanford OT Bob Whitfield. He will be matched against former Falcons DE Chris Doleman ... RB Jamal Anderson has been outstanding, and each week he grabs more playing time from veteran Craig "Ironhead" Heyward. Anderson has more speed than the husky Heyward ... WR Eric Metcalf had a huge season for the Falcons last year and is tough to contain ... K Morten Andersen has won 23 games on last-second field goals including one against the Niners in '93 when he was with the Saints.

DICK DRAPER Best 49ers' defensive season ... ever?

Maybe.

It's only been two games and, sure, those beaten foes will be little more than mud on the bottom of a Super Bowl contender's cleats, but the Niners' D is already showing signs of greatness and already vying for the best-of-the-best label despite its superlative 1995 campaign.

Prediction: Seven 49ers, a club record, will make the NFC's Pro Bowl defensive squad this year.

Those Hicks-Lott-Turner-Williamson years set a standard for 49ers defenses, yet that group might bale in comparison to a squad bordering on legendary.

Merton Hanks. Tim McDonald. Dana Stubblefield. Ken Norton Jr. Chris Doleman. Lee Woodall. Bryant Young. "The Magnificent Seven" rides again.

Offense was always the 49ers' battle flag. See it fly. The passing game, best in the business, always overshadowed the defense in fans' minds. Montana, Rice, Young & Co. were the collective gas pedal, the accelerator, and rarely would you ever see spectators wearing defensive men's jerseys. That's going to change.

This is a virtual mountain range of big men on the defense — San Francisco skyscrapers, towers of talent, backed by a highway patrol secondary that always has its red lights and sirens on, ticketing the speedsters by air and by land. I call them the Bloodhounds from Hell, this defense. All teeth, snarl and eat-'em-alive drool, along with a menacing knack of sniffing out the ball-carriers... in advance. The Psychic Seven.*

It's scary. They seemingly KNOW what's going to happen, as if opposing running backs were carrying a crystal ball.

The Niners led the NFL-in run defense last year, giving up only 66.3 yards rushing per game, and they're 20 yards ahead of that figure so far.

Unbelievable? No. Believable.

This seven will make the Pro Bowl, with Young a lock, barring injury, to be a first-timer. His two official sacks for 15 yards against the Rams shouts to the football world that he'll be an unstoppable force.

There should be an eighth Pro Bowler, but Gary Plummer has long been the forgotten man for post-season honors. He'll have to settle, unfortunately, for one of those "Lifetime Achievement Awards" for service some day. No Oscars. No Emmys. No Tonys. No jersey number retired.

EXTRA POINTS

THESE SEVEN ARE MAGNIFIC

Ironically, with Plummer sidelined, the Niners haven't missed a tackle thanks to understudy Kevin Mitchell. Mitch bellowed from Day One two years ago that he should be a starter, worried he'd be lost in the morass of special teams' play — out of sight and out of mind.

But he lost that Invisible Man moniker in the preseason and heads into the Panthers game with 10 tackles, a pass defensed and a fumble recovery.

And he's still a relative baby.

This group, this seven, is a joy to watch, making it a both-sides-of-the-ball spectators' delight. You expect near perfection from the offense, now you'll get it from the defense as well.

It's no coincidence that Pete Carroll's defensive genius is behind it all. Skilled athletes? Got 'em. But blending them into a cohesive, selfless unit is the real trick, along with a brilliantly devised attacking scheme that lets these seven play free and loose and smart.

Two games, a shutout, two interceptions, only one TD allowed — what a start. Already the 49ers lead the league in total defense (336 yards per game) and are tied with the Broncos for best passing defense at 122 yards per.

The competition's going to get a little tougher this weekend. The Panthers are 2-0 and on home turf. But expect the Niners' defensive statistics to get tougher as well.

Weak links? Marquez Pope has strengthened his bond with two good games, featuring an interception, four passes defensed and a second-best 12 tackles overall.

He's not part of the Magnificent Seven, but he's a big-numbers candidate himself. Same with Tyronne Drakeford. The man is making plays so far, looked good on that blazing attack on Rams' quarterback Tony Banks, stripping the ball loose.

Defensive end Roy Barker is another player capable of cracking into the elite defensive group. He's forced a fumble, contributed a sack.

It won't be a perfect year defensively. There'll be slipups — a blown coverage here, a missed tackle there. These seven and their brethren are still only human after all. But God help the opposing offenses.

This could be a history-making season for the 49ers' defense. Never before has seven SF "D" players made the Pro Bowl, but last year's record of six is already in jeopardy.

LaFleur Is A Blooming Talent

The Kiper Korner

By Mel Kiper Jr.

This week I am providing a thumbnail sketch of the blue-chip TIGHT END prospects available for the 1997 NFL Draft. Next week we'll have a jam-packed report, covering the OFFENSIVE TACKLES, GUARDS, and CENTERS

- 1. DAVID LAFLEUR, 6-6 1/2, 270, Lcuisiana State - Although things improved late last season and in 1996, the quarterback situation at LSU has been shaky to say the least during much of LaFleur's tenure, but he's still managed to make his mark as one of the top combination pass receiving-blocking tight ends to come down the pike in recent years. LaFleur has carried a high-grade daring back to his high school days in Louisiana when he was a heralded recruit after starring in football, basketball and track. This kid has the physical skills to take over games, while also accentuating the offensive line with his ability to move defenders off the line of scrimmage. LaFleur is a better overall prospect than Kyle Brady (Penn State 1995) so don't be surprised if you hear his name called within the first 5-8 sélections on Round 1.
- 2.DAMON JONES, 6-5, 268, Southern Illinois Although still an unknown to most fans, Jones has been catching the eye of the NFL scouts since he transferred from Michigan following the 1993 season. Jones has no problem getting off the line and setting up in the hook zones, while also possessing the quickness to threaten the deep middle area. Physically, he's similar to LaFleur, with the key difference being level of competition. That's why for Jones, the post-season alf-star games will be the key determining factor as to just how high up on the first day (Rounds 1-3) he's chosen.
- 3. ITULA MILI, 6-3, 251, Brigham Young Qualifies as a major league motion TE or H-back in the NFL—able to catch, run, and block with the best of them and ranking as one of the finest athletes in Cougars history. Mili effortlessly pulls in even the toughest of receptions, then uses his agility and raw speed to do serious damage after the catch. He can finesse defenders with a hesitation move, or utilize sheer power to take on defensive backs or linebackers when the situation presents itself. You might see Mili slide a little farther in the draft, but that's only because he won't be labeled a true tight end prospect.
- 4. BRYAN JENNINGS, 6-3 1/2, 248, Virginia Tech With Bryan Still taking his speed and big-play ability to the NFL, the Hokies have been relying heavily on Jennings early in the 1996 campaign. Jennings has the knack for shielding defenders from the ball in a crowd, showing a better feel for reading coverages and locating the weak areas in a zone. By the middle-to-later portion of the season, I expect Jennings to be one key reason Tech quarterback Jim Druckenmiller has made a quantum leap up the draft board.

- 5. PETE CHRYPLEWICZ, 6-4, 255, Notre Dame Could have entered the '96' draft, where he would have likely figured as a fifth- or sixth-round selection. By returning for his fifth year of eligibility, Chryplewicz gave himself the chance to significantly enhance his rating, while becoming more of a focal point in the offense. I have to temper my enthusiasm because we can't forget Lou Holtz uses right ends primarily as extra tackles. Chryplewicz engulfs the football, shows power and determination in the open field, and brings a confident, hard-nosed approach to the squad.
- 6.O.J. SANTIAGO, 6-61/2, 265, Kent State Ranks right with Mili in terms of sheer athletic ability, and will definitely be one of the top physical specimens to come out of the Mid-America Conference in quite some time. Because this is the third straight year the tight end position has been far above average in quality and depth, most NFL clubs have been able to solve problems at that spot. This means that in order for a tight end to figure as a first-day selection this year, you will have to rank as one of the top 3-5 available, or figure to be a major bargain on Rounds 4-7.
- 7. KRIS MANGUM, 6-4, 243, Mississippi Has really settled in as a top-drawer tight end after beginning his college career at Alabama. Mangum has added weight and muscle since joining the Rebels, without losing any quickness or speed. In fact, Mangum seems more agile, with better body control than he showed as a sophomore. He adjusts well to poorly thrown passes, always extending his hands to pull in the reception. This year Mangum wants the ball thrown his way on third down, giving some indications his final grade could rival that of former Ole Miss star Wesley Walls.
- 8. MATT LEPSIS, 6-4 1/2, 265, Colorado - Powerful athlete who made the switch from offensive tackle early in his career. Even after the position change, Lepsis saw most of his action as a blocker in CU's double-tight end alignment. Came into his own last season, hauling in 25 receptions, which more than doubled his career total to that point. With all the speed and big-play ability CU has at wide receiver with Rae Carruth, Phil Savoy and James Kidd, quarterback Koy Detmer needs a big, strong weapon like Lepsis to provide the offense with a different option. Lepsis runs pretty well for a big man, but what's most impressive is that last season he ranked as the Buffaloes' top-conditioned athlete.

9. FREDDIE JONES, 6-4, 251, North Carolina - Although a three-year starter with the Tar Heels, Jones isn't nearly as experienced catching the football as you might expect. Entering the '96 campaign, Jones had just 29 receptions, only two of which were touchdowns. Fortunately for Jones and the Tar Heels, they now have a quarterback in junior college transfer Chris Keldorf who can run their new pro-style. This means the passing attack has been more potent than at any point in Mack Brown's tenure as head coach, and in turn Jones will see the ball delivered his way with much more frequency. In their upset of Syracuse, Jones pulled in a key TD pass that showcased his impressive physical skills and NFL potential. If he puts together the type of senior year that's anticipated, you could see Jones make a huge move up the draft board.

Now that Johnny McWilliams and Tyler Cashman are no longer with the Trojans, you would be led to believe John Robinson could be in trouble at this spot. Well, forget that. In Allred, the Trojans have a confident, sure handed, strong blocking tight end who might lack McWilliams' athletic ability, but is still regarded as a fourth- or fifth-rounder who could ultimately develop into a starter in the NFL.

Here are the remaining TE prospects in order of their current grade according to my ratings:

Chad Lewis, 6-5, 238, BYU; Steve Bush, 6-2, 261, Arizona State; Patrick Hape, 6-3 1/ 2, 258, Alabama; Nicky Savoie, 6-5, 1/2, 240, LSU; Scott Pfeiffer, 6-4, 246, Tennessee; Keith Olsommer, 6-3 1/2, 245, Penn -State; Josh Wilcox, 6-2, 247, Oregon; Bill Lingerfelt, 6-3 1/2, 242, Missouri; Ron Leshinski, 6-3, 243, Army; Jim Moore, 6-3, 245, Kansas; Ed Perry, 6-4, 237, James Madison; Darren Drexler, 6-5, 260, Northwestern; Pat Fitzgerald, 6-2, 231, Texas; Scott Richards, 6-4, 253, East Carolina; Mitch Jacoby, 6-4, 251, No. Illinois; Jessie McCovery, 6-1 1/2, 257, Auburn; Sean Bullard, 6-4, 228, California; Eric Boykin, 6-2, 221, West Virginia; Luther Broughton, 6-2, 242, Furman; Gerard Daphnis, 6-2, 247, Miami (Fla.); Grant Baynham, 6-4, 246, Georgia Tech; Hosea Friday, 6-1 1/2, 237, Kansas.
